

University of Georgia/Medical College of Georgia Child Life Program Frequently Asked Questions

What is a Child Life Specialist?

A Child Life Specialist (CLS) works in health care settings and focuses on the emotional and developmental needs of children and families. Using play and other forms of communication, this professional member of the health care team seeks to reduce the stress associated with health care experiences and enables children and family members to cope in a positive manner. Career opportunities include working as a child life specialist or as a child life administrator in a hospital or other health care setting. Child life programs range in size from one child life specialist to more than twenty.

What is the Child Life Council?

The Child Life Council is the professional organization of Child Life Specialists. The Child Life Council has a website, www.childlife.org that contains information on membership, certification, conferences, careers, clinical training sites, current news in the field of Child Life, academic programs and resource materials.

What is the typical day of a Child Life Specialist?

Every day a Child Life Specialist helps children by preparing them for what procedures and experiences they will encounter. Also, they try to create a less threatening environment for children in what can sometimes be a scary place. Daily activities will vary according to rotations to different units and the needs of the patients.

Is Child Life organized the same in all hospitals?

No, Child Life programs vary from hospital to hospital. Some departments are director based, which means that a director is in charge of many Child Life Specialists. The program at MCG is a self-directed work team, where Child Life Specialists work in a team and report to one another.

How do you become a Child Life Specialist?

To become a Child Life Specialist, you need a Baccalaureate degree in one of the following majors: Child Life, Child and Family Development, or other related fields. You must also do a Child Life internship, which the Child Life Council states must be for at least 480 hours under the supervision of a Certified Child Life Specialist. The last requirement for certification is that you must pass an exam given by the Child Life Council. Please visit the Child Life Council website, www.childlife.org, for further information about certification.

University of Georgia/Medical College of Georgia Child Life Program Frequently Asked Questions

What is the Child Life Joint Program between MCG and UGA?

The University of Georgia and the Medical College of Georgia have established a joint program that allows UGA students that are majoring in Child and Family Development with a Child Life Emphasis to complete their senior year Child Life training at MCG.

What does the program entail?

Students spend three years at UGA taking Child and Family Development classes, and then they spend their senior year in Augusta participating in over 1000 hours of clinical experience with four Child Life Specialists. In addition to completing their clinical experience, students take coursework at the Medical College of Georgia. After completing these requirements, students graduate with a degree from UGA in Child and Family Development with a Child Life Emphasis.

In what departments do Child Life Specialists work at MCG?

At the Medical College of Georgia, Child Life Specialists work in different parts of the hospital. They are as follows: the Emergency Room and Pediatric Intensive Care Unit, Hematology/ Oncology (both in and out patient children), Inpatient Medical Floor, and the Surgical Unit.

What would my hours be during my senior year at MCG?

Students work in clinical rotations in various shifts for extended periods of time. The hours often vary because the first Child Life Specialist arrives at the hospital around 6:30 a.m. in the morning and the last Child Life Specialist does not leave until close to midnight. This rotation of varied clinical positions allows students to experience many different aspects of Child Life. Students complete over 1000 hours of clinical training during their year at MCG.

How many students are admitted each year?

Due to the intense supervision by MCG staff, the Child Life program usually accepts no more than 4-5 students each year.

If available for the HOPE scholarship, will my education still be covered if I enter the joint program?

Yes, but it often takes a while to get through all of the paperwork.

When can I apply to the program?

You are eligible to apply when you have completed a minimum of 30 hours of coursework. Students usually apply during their sophomore or junior year of college.

University of Georgia/Medical College of Georgia Child Life Program Frequently Asked Questions

What are the requirements to apply and be accepted into the Child Life Emphasis?

Students need to have a cumulative GPA of 3.0 with at least 30 hours of class work and be formally admitted into the Department of Child and Family Development to be considered for the Child Life Emphasis. Also, it is preferred that students have taken or be enrolled in CHFD 4810 Hospitalized Child and the Family before applying. Students must also have completed a shadowing experience with a certified Child Life Specialist. The Child Life Specialist must provide a letter documenting that you have shadowed at least 8 hours. This shadowing experience allows students to know more about the field of Child Life. Students must fill out an application and participate in an interview with MCG staff. Keep in mind that you must apply and be accepted into the program to be considered for a Child Life emphasis; you cannot just transfer into the Child Life program.

How can I increase my chances of being accepted?

Make sure that Child Life is the profession that is right for you. Get as much experience as possible working with well children and children in hospital settings. Gain experience by volunteering at a local children's hospital or on the pediatric floor of a general hospital. Understand the concerns of children with special needs through work at various camps, early intervention programs, and childcare. It is important that students understand the development of children. MCG looks for interns that have a sound knowledge of Child Development, including Child Development theory, have a variety of experiences with children and are enthusiastic and knowledgeable about work in the field of child life.

What do I do if I am a senior and just learning about Child Life and the joint emphasis program?

There are a number of emphases for students in this position. Students should carefully consider the best emphasis for their career goals and may want to consult their advisor before deciding how to pursue their studies in Child Life. Students may choose to extend their time in an undergraduate program to participate in the joint Child Life Emphasis; however, this does not guarantee your acceptance into the program. You must still apply and be accepted into the program in order to attend. As another alternative, students may choose to graduate and seek Child Life internship emphasis on their own. Finally, students may pursue a Master's Degree in Child Life by entering into a graduate school program.
